

Antimatter engines will be common. Quantum computers will be blindingly fast and able to calculate galaxy movements and planetary ages more accurately. New telescopes will open up more of the visible and non-visible space. New dimensions will be discovered and how to travel back-and-forth will be simple and common. Gravity mathematics will be discovered with machines doing wondrous things which are now not thought of. Fossil fuel's will no longer be used. Energy will be free. Quantum tunnelling will be understood and new dimensions leveraged.

Given all the wondrous new discoveries between now and then in the intervening 200 years from now, we likely still will not have human immortality in 200 years. Some problems with aging, injury, and disease are going to be more difficult to render cured. That means most all the science we are gathering now about Wellness will still be applicable 200 years from today. Those people who think the scientists and medical doctors are going to be able to cure everything in their lifetime are likely, very likely to get a surprise. There may be some discoveries but those discoveries may come with disabilities. There are unknowns. There is an element of uncertainty in it all.

In 2222 if you jump out of an aeroplane and your parachute does not open, there will not be doctors who can put you back together again. In the cartoon world it can be done. But, we don't live in a cartoon world. There is no magic. What you can do for yourself, now, is follow the science. That behaviour offers the best hope.

We hope for a long healthy life. The problem is the body is not perfect. It gets injured. It breaks down. Science shows how to minimize injuries. Science shows how to avoid certain diseases. Science shows how to live a better life with less suffering. We can all follow the science. Wellness Risk Management leads us to the Self-Help portions of Wellness science.
